

Author: Kelsey Fishbein, Matthew Erni, Nicholas Pio, Carter Risse

Problem Statement

Many people are bored of going to the same spots repeatedly in their area and would like to branch out and discover unfamiliar places but do not know how. Familiar places or extremely foreign places are where this boredom mostly occurs. This is relevant because boredom can lead to depression, lack of motivation, and anxiety.

Who is experiencing this problem?

Teens are people who most commonly experience this problem but it can happen to anyone.

What is the problem?

People do not know good places to go in the place that they live.

Where does the problem present itself?

The problem can present itself anywhere.

Why does it matter?

It matters because boredom and a lack of things to do can lead to depression, anxiety, and even getting involved in bad things.